Never draw a bird. It is worth while to pay freight on intestines, because meat can not be kept sweet long, after being drawn, and the air admitted inside of the body.

It is a practice of some of the best poultrymen, after the birds are plucked, to plunge them suddenly into boiling water. This gives them a clean, plump appearance, and makes them look if they are in decently good condition when killed. Nothing, however, can make a poor bird look well, while ill dressing will make the best bird look poor.

Lay the birds upon clean boards, in a cold

Never pack in barrels if you can get good dry goods boxes, as the rolling of the barrels injures the poultry. Well packed boxes of well prepared birds will keep sweet for a long time in cool weather, and may be transported by express or by rail, and, arriving in good order, can be sold readily at the highest market prices.

The sensibility of some animals and plants to the varying condition of the atmosphere is so great that a careful study of their movements will often indicate to a certainty approaching changes in the weather. When a storm is pending, the spider shortens the thread of his web, and lengthens them again when the storm is about to pass off; careful observers even pretend to tell how long the ighest market prices.

DRESSING POULTRY FOR MARKET.

Messrs. B. & S. Beatty, of Cayuga county, N. Y., gives the following directions for dressing poultry for market:

Never kill a bird unless it is fat. Never cut off the heads of turkeys or geese, but hang them by the heels where they can not bruise themselves in the death struggle, and stick them with a small knife and bleed them to death. Ducks and common fowls, if decapitated, should be held or tied, and hung up to bleed to death. Never kill your birds with full crops; you will lose in price more than you gain in weight. Never strangle them, so as to leave the blood in. The best plan is to tie all kinds of birds to a line drawn from post to post, or tree to tree, and stick them just in the forward end of the neck. Never kill on a damp day.

You may pick all sorts of birds dry, if you

You may pick all sorts of birds dry, if you don't tear the skin, but you must scald them afterward by dipping them suddenly in and out of boiling water. Don't scald the legs too much, whether you pick first or afterwards. Be careful of that. You must pick them clean, and the after scalding makes them look plump and good.

A Man Seventy Years Old.

I have had Catarrh over thirty years.
I have tried doctors and medicines almost without coumber, my trength constantly failing under their treatment, and without any relief from any one, until reatment, and without any relief from any one, until recommenced using DR. Wotcover's AWNIHLLATOR for Cotarrh. I hardly know how to express my gratitude sign the wonderful beneath I have the wonderful beneath I have 250 Wash
